

Sustainable Transportation Investment

ISSUE

In December 2015, Congress passed and the President signed into law the Fixing America's Surface Transportation (FAST) Act, providing five years of increased funding to support highway and transit projects, while including new reforms to enhance program efficiency. ACEC thanks lawmakers who supported this landmark legislation, and urges Congress to remain focused on adopting long-term, sustainable funding mechanisms to support the nation's transportation needs.

BACKGROUND

Passage of the FAST Act, a 5-year, $305 billion reauthorization of highway, transit, and rail programs, was a signature legislative accomplishment in 2015. States and local governments can now move forward with long-stalled projects with the certainty of multi-year federal commitments. The FAST Act also contains numerous program reforms that, if implemented successfully, will reduce regulatory burdens, promote innovation, and foster private sector participation in project delivery.

The new law recognizes the valuable role engineering firms play in working with state and local transportation agencies to deliver transportation projects efficiently and effectively. Section 1443 of the FAST Act urges the Secretary of Transportation to encourage State DOTs to partner with engineering firms "to strengthen project performance, improve domestic competitiveness, and create jobs." Transportation agencies rely on the specialized skills and technical expertise that firms provide to solve complex design challenges in creative ways. They also use local firms to meet tight project deadlines and manage project risks. The FAST Act reinforces the value of those partnerships and encourages greater utilization.

The passage of the FAST Act with broad, bipartisan majorities in both the House (359-65) and Senate (83-16) demonstrates a strong commitment to federal investment in the nation's infrastructure. The remaining challenge is to reach consensus on options for strengthening the long-term fiscal stability of the Highway Trust Fund, which was not addressed in the legislation. The annual gap between Highway Trust Fund revenues and annual expenditures is projected to grow to $20 billion by 2021.

Alternative fuel vehicles, more efficient cars and trucks, and changing driving patterns will continue to erode a revenue structure that has not been updated in decades. In the meantime, transportation system conditions and performance continue to deteriorate. Discussions and engagement between policymakers, stakeholders, and the public on how to tackle this growing challenge cannot wait until the FAST Act expires.

KEY POINTS

- Transportation infrastructure forms the basis of economic growth. Every dollar invested in highway and transit development generates between $4-8 in economic output.
- Congress still needs to focus on a long-term, sustainable solution for the Highway Trust Fund. More than $140 billion has been transferred into the HTF since 2008 because of the failure to address systemic funding shortfalls with real revenue solutions.
- Funding is not keeping pace with system needs. According to AASHTO, annual investment from all levels of government needs to increase from $88 billion to $120 billion for roads and bridges and from $17 billion to $43 billion in the nation's public transit systems in order to improve conditions and meet the nation's mobility needs.
